

	Yes	Partly	No	Evidence to support this judgement
There is a senior leader responsible for literacy across the curriculum. The monitoring of impact of literacy strategies by the Leadership Team and governors ensures that progress is regularly reviewed and next steps identified.
Data is used effectively to target pupil progression in reading, writing, speaking and listening and this is communicated to all teachers. Appropriate support and intervention is provided where necessary.
Common literacy targets are identified for each year group and built into subject plans. Subject leaders liaise with the English department to ensure that everyone is aware of the literacy demands within subjects.
Literacy skills are taught consistently and systematically in all subject areas. Skills taught in English are consolidated, reinforced and embedded in other subject areas.
Expectation of standards of accuracy and presentation are similar in all classrooms. Teachers' marking supports key literacy points and common misspellings; punctuation and grammar errors are dealt with appropriately and consistently. Teachers across the curriculum use the same terminology.

All teachers are equipped to deal with literacy issues in their subject, both generically and specifically. Training and CPD is focused on need and is effective in impacting on standards. All staff have been trained.
The same strategies, such as the teaching sequence for writing, active reading strategies, planning speaking and listening for learning, are used across the school.
Teachers are explicit when they are teaching about important core skills that pupils are using: for example, how to skim or scan a text.
Teachers make expectations clear before they begin a task – such as sharing the conventions of a particular text type.
Teachers reinforce the importance of accuracy of spoken language by modelling standard English and correcting incorrect grammar in speech (such as ‘we was’, we done...)
Pupils and parents understand the importance of developing literacy and know their role in supporting further development.				